Nehru Family 'Dynasty': A Theory Half Fulfilled

By A.M. Rosenthal New York Times Service

NEW YORK - In India's great years of hope, when Jawaharlal Nehru was prime minister and the people called him their beloved jewel, the young woman was al-most always with him, usually not at his side but a few steps behind. Indira, Nehru's only child, appeared with him at receptions and meetings in New Delhi, smiling, nodding, holding her hands together gently to her forehead in greeting, murmuring a word now and

M. Rosenthal, executive editor she is dead and her son Rajiv is of The New York Times, was its prime minister. She had selected correspondent in India from 1954 to him as her heir when her first 1958. He has revisited India often, most recently in January and Februdied in a wild, senseless aerobatic stunt over New Delhi, almost within sight of his mother's offices.

Because of Indira Gandhi's open and obvious preparation to turn over rule to one of her sons, the theory of Indian dynasty has been growing and now will become written into history. Father to child to grandchild, just as in the days of the rajahs.

It is a neat theory, fitting comfortably into the stereotypes of India, but at best it is only half true and it will take time to discover whether even that half holds.

For the fact is that there is no evidence that Nehru ever really thought in dynastic terms, of turnng over office to his daughter.

There was a closeness between them, but also a certain aloofness. For years — the years he spent in fighting for Indian independence and the years of imprisonment that were part of that struggle — he was remote, a father she knew mostly by his letters from prison. Then her mother died, and Indira went off to school in Britain, far from home and father.

All this was in the '20s and '30s, and it was only when Nehru became prime minister after indepenof India against which her father and her father seemed to become used to harangue the crowds. Now close. She became his hostess, his comrade, his helper.

Her duties as a sort of First Daughter of India kept her distant from her home, from her husband, Feroze, and from her two sons. The marriage withered.

"The key question," a senior expert on Indian affairs said, "is what happens in the streets, how much violence explodes between the Hindus and the Sikhs. India accused Pakistan of aiding extremist Sikhs who are striving for an autonomous state in Punjab.

Sikh Decline in Status

Led to Punjab Unrest

ORIGINS: Sikhism was founded in Punjab in the late 15th century by a guru, or religious teacher, named Nanak. The name Sikh is derived from the Hindi word meaning "disciple," and Sikhs regard themselves as disciples of 10 gurus. The first, Guru Nanak, tanght a monotheistic creed that blended elements of Islam and Hinduism. He was opposed to the hierarchical Hindu caste system, the Brahmin priestly monopoly over religious matters, idolatry and much ritual.

The fifth guru, Arjun, wrote the Adigranth, the first book of Sikh holy scripture. Gobind Singh, the 10th and last guru, declared that spiritual authority would reside in the Adigranth and in the Khalsa, a "community of the pure" made up of a race of soldier-saints.

Gobind Singh tried to forge the Sikhs into a fighting force. The years following his assassination in 1708 saw constant strife between

In House Race, New England Is Bright Spot for Democrats Despite Reagan

International Herald Tribune
WASHINGTON — New England may give its heart to President Ronald Reagan but it will keep its House seats for the Democrats. Mr. Reagan has a virtual lock on 23 of New England's 36 electoral votes, and a sweep is possible if Massachusetts responds to the president's wooing during a campaign visit, which he started Thursday in

But the Democrats are almost certain to win twothirds of the region's 24 House seats. They are also expected to take the Vermont statehouse away from the Republicans, and they have a shot at the Senate and gubernatorial seats in New Hampshire.

In Vermont, which is expected to vote solidly for Mr. Reagan, former Lieutenant Governor Madeleine M. Kunin, 51, a Democrat, is favored to defeat Attorney General John J. Easton, 41, and become the first woman governor of Vermont. She would succeed Richard B. Snelling, a Republican, who is retiring. In the House race, James M. Jeffords, 50, a Republican, is expected to win his sixth term. In New Hampshire, another Reagan stronghold,

In the New Hampshire gubernatorial race, Chris Spirou, 41, the Democratic minority leader in the legislature, is given only an outside chance of defeat- in recent polls.

Treasurer Anthony J. Solomon, 52. In the two House races, Representative Fernand J. St. Germain, chairman of the Banking Committee, is expected to win his 13th term, while the other House seat will remain Republican.

Massachusetts is one of only two states that most pollsters see leaning toward Mr. Mondale.

In the race there for the seat of Senator Paul E.

Tsongas, who is retiring the Democratic lieutenant governor, John F. Kerry, 40, had been expected to defeat a conservative Republican businessman, Ray Shamie, 63. Mr. Shamie, however, has gained rapidly ing the incumbent, John H. Sununu, 45. The two House seats are expected to remain split between the parties.

Rhode Island could go for Walter F. Mondale, although this is considered unlikely. In the Senate race, Claiborne Pell, 65, a Democrat, is expected to remain split between the parties.

In the House, the Massachusetts delegation is expected to keep its present division of 10 Democrats and one Republican, with Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., the House speaker, and Frank Boland, the Intelligence Committee chairman, winning their 17th terms, and Silvio Conte, the Republican, his 14th.

The only race that appears in doubt involves a six-term Democratic incumbent, Gerry E. Studds, 47, who was censured in 1983 for homosexual involvement

John R. McKernan Jr., 36, could be upset by Barry J. Hobbins, 32, a Democratic state representative.

Connecticut, which has no Senate or gubernatorial race this year, is expected to vote overwhelmingly for Mr. Reagan. Its six House seats are expected to remain with four Democrats and two Republicans.

The main danger to the Democrats in Connecticut, according to some experts, is purely mechanical - a special lever on voting machines that allows voters to cast a party-line vote without pulling down the individual levers over each name on the ballot.

At least some voters will likely pull the party-line lever without even looking at the House candidates. If the overall vote is solidly pro-Reagan, as expected, Republican candidates stand to gain.

Ferraro Challenges Reagan to Debate

MILWAUKEE (LAT) - Geraldine A. Ferraro has challenged President Ronald Reagan to a debate his suggestion that she was chosen to be the Democratic vice presidential candidate because she is a woman and not because of her qualifications.

"If the president has any doubts about my substance," she said, "perhaps he and I could have a debate." She called for "kind of a one-onone thing without reporters interfering or [timing] lights going on and off." She said "I'm sure one of the networks would lend us a little bit of

Gap in Wages Between Men, Women Is Closing Rapidly, Study in U.S. Says

Washington Post Service
LOS ANGELES — The wage

gap between men and women is narrowing rapidly and has not remained constant for the past half-century as widely believed, accord-ing to a study by the Rand Corp.

The report, which was released nesday, is by two economis James P. Smith and Michael P. Ward. They said that women's pay as a percentage of men's was far lower in the 1920s than previously reposted but has jumped to 64 per-cent from 60 percent in the last lour years, the "largest and swiftest" gain of the century.

By 2000, they said, women's pay will have risen to "at least 74 per cent" of men's if present trends

The economists attributed the gains to women's improving coucaion and work experience rather than equal employment opportuni-ty legislation enacted during the 1960s and 1970s, or "government commissions or political movements."

Their conclusions added firel to the debate over "comparable worth," the efforts to legislate standards of comparable pay for com-parable jobs held by men and wom-en. These efforts have become an issue in the political campaign, with women's groups and Democrats generally in favor of them and Republicans against.

A rapidly closing wage gap would be wonderful if in fact it happens," said Judy Goldsmith, president of the National Organization for Women. "But it would be nothing but naive to say that the advances in women's education and work experience had nothing to do with legislation or political

Pilot in KAL 007 Case Will Not Give Evidence

By Richard Wirkin New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — A Korean Air Lines pilot who had been ex-pected to cast some light on a fel-low pilot soff-course flight into Soviet airspace more than a year ago has resigned from the company and therefore will not give a deposition, according to an airline lawyer.

The pilot, Y.M. Park, was flying a Korean Air Lines Boeing 747 that took off behind Flight 007, a sister plane whose journey ended with its destruction by a Soviet fighter plane on Sept. 1, 1983. He was to have given pretrial testimony in lawsuits filed here growing out of the disaster, which cost the lives of all 269 persons aboard Flight 007.

That testimony, which was to have been taken in private, was viewed by aviation experts as of potential importance. This was be-cause of the clues Mr. Park might have provided to help explain several issues that have figured in speculation on why Flight 007 had entered Soviet airspace.

The airline lawyer, George N. Tompkins Jr. of New York, said in court Wednesday that Mr. Park resigned last week "for personal rea-

Mr. Park's jumbo jet took off from Anchorage, Alaska, 14 min-utes after Faght 007, which veered far off course and was destroyed by one or more air-to-air missiles as it passed over the southern tip of the Soviet island of Sakhalin.

The second plane, Flight 015, was bound for Seoul, like its sister craft. It figured importantly in the ease because it twice relayed position reports from Flight 007 when that flight was unable to make di-rect radio contact with the air traf-reorganization of the flight department last spring, Captain Park was given a desk job because he was coming close to retirement. He re-cently said if he was not restored to full flight status, he would refuse to come and testify."

One of the issues figuring in speculation about the 1983 disaster was whether the captain of Flight 007, B.I. Chun, had deliberately taken a shortcut. It has been suggested that he and Mr. Park were in a race to Scoul. Another issue was whether Korean pilots had ever been offered extra money by the airline to take shortcuts to save

A third question was whether Mr. Park deemed the radio troubles of Flight 007 to be unusual and considered taking steps to find out if his colleague had gone off course.

The disclosure that Mr. Park would not testify was made in a hearing in Federal District Court in Washington before Chief Judge Aubrey E. Robinson Jr., who is hearing a consolidated damage suit brought on behalf of survivors of most of the victims.

The Soviet government has said that the plane was on an espionage mission. It has also contended that, even if it was not, the United States must have known that the plane was off course and should have

The International Civil Aviation Organization, a United Nations affiliate, decided after an inquiry that no evidence had been found to indicate that the plane's deviation "was premeditated."

The United States has said repeatedly that no government agency was aware that the plane was off course and over Soviet territory.

It was organized by the 40-nation International Bureau of Informatics, which was created 10 years ago by the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

The line separating media activities and data exchanges has been progressively fading, the confer-ence noted. The development of data processing, computers, micro-chips and satellites in the past decade has created many international problems that governments and individuals never faced before, it added.

According to the conference: • Computer data, like credit card information, are often stolen or moved from one country to another without any specific court appointed to judge such cases. • The use of satellites by developed countries has allowed those nations to find out about crop failures or detailed geological forma-tions in Africa and Latin America before governments of developing nations were aware of them. Such information could allow for speculation on commodities markets.

Richard Leonard, president of the International Press Institute and editor of the Milwaukee Journai, told the group:

"In fact, we have multinational corporations, industry networks, officials and corporations have atcomputer service bureaus, information services, government organizations, international private organizations, military defense systems, news media, telephone traffic, broadcasting and other communications elements all participating in an information bombardment that raises problems of security, personal privacy, right of access, national sovereignty, cultural dom-ination, national vulnerability and

"If we remain silent on this horrible crime and if we cope with it without a protest, a scaring fear will paralyze our thoughts, words and acts," said a statement released by the group.

The statement said the strike should be held either on Saturday, the day of the priest's funeral, or if that is a free day from work, on Nov. 9. Poles work on some Satur-

The group included Andrzej Gwiazda, a one-time rival to the Solidarity leader Lech Walesa, and marked the first time that leading union activists have called for a strike since Nov. 10, 1982, when the Solidarity underground leadership unsuccessfully appealed for a general strike to protest the outlawing of the union.

We have to stop passivity as a method of struggle against evil. the group said.

Mr. Walesa said he was not consulted about the statement and disagreed with the strike call. I think the climate is unfavorable for such actions," he said. "It is not my point of view." Mr. Gwiazda was among seven Solidarity leaders to be released from prison under July's general amnesty for political prisoners. Father Popieluszko, 37, was found dead Tuesday in a reservoir in northern Poland, 11 days after he was abducted by three officers in the Polish secret police force. An Internal Affairs Ministry spokesman said Wednesday the three would likely face murder charges. There were no reports of unrest following the announcement that Father Popieluszko's body had been found, although some former Solidarity activists said they were watching to see whether the government provided a full explana-

India Without Gandhi

It very nearly happened in Brighton two weeks ago, in Rome and in Washington three years before. This time, in New Delhi, assassins claimed a world leader, Indira Gandhi, and forced a new crisis for India's democracy. The prime minister's immense authority was chiefly personal. She leaves no real successor.

much more was invested in her than in even a pope, a U.S. president or British prime minister: the task of holding India together and free. That task passes, for the moment, to Mrs.

Gandhi's son, Rajiv, quickly sworn in as inter-im prime minister. Untested, he will need much of his mother's skill and courage to contain any backlash by the Hindu majority against the Sikh minority, from whose militant ranks the assassins are said to have come. He will also need to honor the constitutional mandate to hold national elections by January.

Rajiv Gandhi's chief claim to command is his name. For all but about five years since independence in 1947, India has been led by either his grandfather, Jawaharlal Nehru, or his formidable mother. It is striking that the world's most populous democracy has had to turn to a single family. Its dominance is due in part to a weak, divided opposition, but also to the ruling dynasty's skill at manipulating rivalries and developing cults of personality.

The benefit, for India, has been a resilient stability through periods of great economic and social stress. The family has also provided continuity in policy — a neutralism that some-times tilts to Moscow, a mixed economy that impressively increased food production and a generally free political atmosphere and independent judiciary. But there have been lapses. Mrs. Gandhi was quick to equate dissent with betrayal. This led her to suspend democratic rights during the 21-month "emer-gency." To her credit, she yielded office when India's voters rebelled against that trespass.

She fought her way back only to face the agonizing challenge of Sikh extremists in the Punjab, whose revolt turned the Golden Temple in Amritsar into a fortress. Proclaiming the primacy of national union even over a religious shrine, Mrs. Gandhi ordered a bloody assault last June, and loosed the demons that apparently claimed her life.

India will survive this tracedy and perhaps learn a new lesson. Precisely because human wit cannot assure the survival of any leader, great nations need bulletproof political sys-tems. India's freedoms already set it apart from most of the Third World. But that democracy should not have to depend on the progeny of one remarkable family.

On a Back Road in India: 'She Is No More'

DEHRA DUN, India — A gang of toughs blocked the road just as the bus approached a hill village this afternoon. I had been traveling all night in a convoy of buses and trucks. The convoys form at dusk, spontaneously, to seek protection in numbers from the dacoits. who sometimes attack and rob travelers, but they usually disband at dawn. Yet here were these men ordering the driver to empty the bus.

"Haven't you heard the news?" the men shouted. "What news?" the driver asked. "Indira has been shot; all traffic must stop to mark the peoples' sorrow and shame." There were riots in the towns, it wasn't safe to go on.

"Do you have any Sikhs inside?" a burly man asked, and climbed the rickety steps into the bus to see for himself. There were none.

The passengers filed out. The young men who had stopped us were students from a nearby college, members of the youth wing of the Con-gress Party. Passengers joined the villagers who filled the roadside tea shop, a rough wooden shed with uneven benches along the walls. An argument was in progress; the villagers had surrounded a frightened, whimpering man.

"So now you are crying. The last time you were here you said she was no good. Why are you weeping? I am crying for her," he sobbed.

"You are crying because you are frightened. Say you are sorry."
"I am sorry. I truly am, I never meant

An official appeared from somewhere and tried to reason with the young men. He was

By Victor Zorza obviously scared of them, but he wanted no trouble. It was true that the radio said that Indira Gandhi had been shot. But there was nothing to indicate that she was dead. He had just talked to a man who had arrived from the town for which the bus was making. There were no riots. The bus must be allowed to proceed.

The students let us go, reluctantly. A hill woman on the back seat began a loud lament. "What will we poor people do if she dies? She was our mother, sister, leader; the rich will pound us into pulp, squezze us dry."

The wealthy farmer sitting next to me had gone to school in town and spoke English. He had been talking to me during the night and had declared himself to be a supporter of the January Party. Indira was sure to be thrown out in the January election and good riddance. She had January election and good riddance. She had perverted the government, appointed corrupt sy-cophants as ministers, and was determined to perpetuate the family's dynastic rule. The state of emergency she had declared in the mid-70s had been dictatorship, pure and simple. The compulsory sterilization had been an abomination that shamed India in the eyes of the world.

Now he spoke again. Of course it wasn't her fault. It was the overzealous officials. She meant

Another traveler also recalled the emergency. It had been a good time. The laws were enforced strictly and impartially. Corruption was being uprooted, the merchants had been too frightened to hoard grain and food prices had gone down. The bus was stopped three more times on the way to town; the passengers were made to disem-bark on the outskirts. The streets were empty and silent. The shops were closed, their shutters down. In the center of town small hushed groups stood in the market square below the clock tow-er. I asked a man about the latest news. There was nothing more in the broadcasts from Delhi. The shooting had taken place in the morning and it was now six in the evening. The wildest rumors were flying around, he said. Then he whispered into my ear. "She's no more. The BBC announced it at noon."

I looked for an eating place, but these too were closed. They had all been shut soon after the news of the shooting was put out by the radio.

Most people I talked to knew the truth, though not from the BBC. They had put two and two together. The All India Radio kept saying that an attempt had been made to assassinate the prime minister. She had been taken to hospital. That was all - it was enough.

An untouchable, in rags, lurched drunkenly from side to side in the street. "The light has gone out of my life. Why shouldn't I be drunk? Indira-

Some people still didn't believe it. The temples were filled with men and women praying for her recovery. They all said the same: "Indira can't die, she must not - the country will fall apart."

Elections in Nicaragua

The Sandinists once hoped to legitimize their rule by elections, but those they are running Sunday, five years after taking power, will resolve nothing. Their Marxist-Leninist side showed through, and the democratic opposition, faced with a measure of harassment that prevented fair campaigning, withdrew. Theoretically, the Sandinists could still do the right thing and postpone the elections, but the greater likelihood is that they will miss this chance to use the vote to start accommodating their opposition and to gain Nicaragua a more secure place in the world. But this is not the end of the line. In particular, the idea of Nicaraguan reconciliation must be kept alive. If Managua has kicked away one good opportunity to start settling political differences by U.S.-style elections, it has not yet forfeited the possibilities of conducting a Nic-araguan-style "dialogue" aimed at ending the nation's civil war and rebuilding its national life. It is a long shot. But Nicaragua remains besieged, divided and nearly broke, and even in Managua there may be some political space open and some pragmatic currents running. No responsible Latin or European government will throw up its hands and accept Managua's mock vote Sunday as the last word. The United States has its own Nicaraguan choices. It seems likely that, no matter who is elected president in the U.S. vote Tuesday, the Central Intelligence Agency will no longer be available as a major instrument of policy, although the Nicaraguan insurgency may somehow carry on for a time. Nor does it seem likely that the president elected Tuesday will be able to mount a U.S. military operation.

American pressure has had a visible, if modest, moderating impact on Sandinist militancy. Still, there were always good reasons, historical and political, for the United States not to rely on a policy of force in dealing with Nica-ragua. In any event, the United States has other options open. A battered but durable process of inter-American diplomacy continues in the Contadora group. Few would claim that the United States has made good use of all the conventional economic and political carrots and sticks available to it.

Meanwhile, Americans have a continuing obligation to help El Salvador tame the guerrilla challenge launched there with crucial Nicaraguan assistance, to nurse the fledgling negotiation opened just a few weeks ago in El Salvador, and to keep underlining the central requirement to resolve all political disputes in the region peacefully.

Questions Democrats Must Face

By Eugene V. Rostow

WASHINGTON — I find it diffi-cult to see how Walter Mondale can hope to persuade us before Elec-tion Day that he is part of the foreign policy tradition of Woodrow Wilson. Franklin Roosevelt, Harry Truman, John Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson -a tradition of bipartisan consensus whose first political priority was a deep concern for national security.

So far Mr. Mondale has given very disturbing signals in the campaign in his speeches and staffing decisions and in the foreign and defense policy planks of the Democratic Party platform. The platform, among other things, endorses the isolationism of Senator Gary Hart.

As a Democrat in the Wilsonian tradition, I suggest several questions that the Democratic candidates will have to face if they wish to restore their party as an alternative governing party.

The first foreign policy item in Mr.

Mondale's campaign has been to reproach President Reagan for not meeting with any of the three ailing Soviet leaders with whom he has had to deal, as if summit meetings between Soviet and American leaders were a kind of political Lourdes, accomplishing marvelous cures. That Mr. Mondale has pushed such a trivial matter erodes confidence in his dement. Does he think we have forgotten that Mr. Reagan and his associates have often said that he is more than willing to engage in summitry and that, in any case, few summit meetings with Soviet leaders have done more good than harm?

Secondly, which issue do the can-didates consider the most important facing us, the nuclear arms negotia-tions or the Soviet policy of indefinite expansion based on the illegal threat and use of force? What forms of Soviet aggression do they think America and its allies should oppose? What nuclear policy would make American deterrence credible in the face of Soviet expansion and arms buildup? In his speech accepting the nomi-nation Mr. Mondale said he took a "sober view" of Soviet policy. But he then said America should not use force to oppose Soviet-sponsored aggression in the Middle East or the Caribbean, two areas where American security interests are obvious and important. Instead, he argued, we should rely on "negotiation" and "quarantine." What does he mean by

Mr. Mondale has told us that the worst mistake of his political life was that he supported the Vietnam War "too long." Does he mean that he now thinks that Presidents Kennedy, Does he mean that he Johnson and Nixon should have won the Vietnam War quickly and decisively, or that they should have refused to carry out America's obliga-tions under the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization pact?

Thirdly, do the Democratic candidates realize that the Soviet nuclear arms buildup of the last 25 years is designed primarily to compel American neutrality while the Soviet Union gains control of the Eurasian land

How would they reconcile Soviet success in such an effort with the U.S. government's duty to preserve the world balance of power?

In the context of these questions, the promise and the risks of the nuclear arms negotiations become clear, Governor Mario Cuomo of New York had made it appear that America, not the Soviet Union, walked out of the Geneva negotiations. And in the second debate with the president Mr. Mondale claimed that America had rejected a promising sketch of a compromise - the "walk in the woods" formula - suggested by the Soviet and American negotiators. In this, as Mr. Reagan pointed out, Mr. Mondale was in error. America did not reject the "walk in the woods" approach but wished to pursue it in the negotiations and made several subsequent proposals based on the idea of the compromise. The only significant issue in the Geneva talks is whether a nuclear arms agreement should be based on the principle of equality between the candidates prepared to accept the So-viet negotiating position, which calls for equal reductions, not reductions to equal Soviet and American levels? An agreement based on the Soviet approach would make the crucial Soviet advantage in ground-based ballistic missiles even bigger.

In their zeal for balancing the budget the Democratic candidates promise severe reductions in the military budgets. How would such reductions square with the fact that the Soviet lead over America both in conventional and in nuclear arms has continued, albeit more slowly, to grow? In the days when Britannia ruled the waves, it was British policy to build a navy equal to the sum of all the other navies in the world. Are Mr. Mondale and Geraldine Ferraro willing to accept a comparable posture on the part of the Soviet Union, for conventional and for nuclear arms?

Food Aid: No Alibi for EC Inaction

By Giles Merritt

By SELS—Ask an EC official interest days why Europe's vast and costly food surpluses cannot all be given away to help feed a starving world, and you risk a dusty answer. For it has become a commonplace among EC policymakers that, far from helping, more giveaways could even aggravate the threat of famine.

Free food, runs the argument, undermines local farmers and results in recipient countries growing less and becoming more dependent. Develop-ment aid that helps Third World countries to support themselves is therefore considered preferable to emergency aid — particularly be-cause the latter often lines the pockets of corrupt local officials.

Emergency aid is inevitably too little and too late. Storage and transportation problems overwhelm the efforts of even the most efficient aid agencies. Cash that will yield struc-tural improvements in poor countries is the only sort of aid that will prevent today's 400 million starving children from numbering 500 million by the end of the century.

One might conclude, therefore, that the administrators and politicians of Europe have the matter well in hand. In fact, such arguments are becoming an alibi for inaction. The European Community limits its food aid to just 2 percent of the communi-ty budget. And the coincidence of bumper harvests across Europe this year with the agony of Ethiopia's famine makes the "naive" question about giving away Europe's unwant-ed food more relevant than ever.

This year the EC's grain mountain has doubled in size to 12 million metric tons, and will cost more than Excess grain could be shipped to Ethiopia for the cost of storage.

$500 million to store. Ethiopia, meanwhile, needs one million tons of what experts call "wheat equivalent." By coincidence, the cost of shipping grain to famine relief agencies there would be about $30 to $35 a ton, exactly the same as it will cost to stockpile it in Europe.

Many lives could be saved at no cost to European taxpayers. The snag is that special funding would have to be agreed by the EC governments. whereas storage costs are automatic. Nobody quarrels with the theory of development aid: Obviously it is best to tackle the root cause of famine. It is in its practice that development aid is so sadly lacking that it should never be presented as a credible alternative to emergency food aid:

The European Community is currently making it plain to 66 disgrun-tled and bewildered countries in Africa, the Pacific and the Caribbean that the Lome-3 trade-and-aid pact for 1985-1989 is being same cash levels, in real terms, as Lome-2. Confronted with a take-itor-leave-it offer of about 7 billion European Currency Units ($9.5 billion). Third World countries with a "special relationship" with the EC are being told there is no extra money for development aid or food aid.

The Third World's situation is worsening fast. The need for emergency food aid to debt-ridden developing countries is growing almost ex-ponentially. To feed the poorest nations — in a world whose population will, by the year 2000, have grown by almost half again to an estimated 6.15 billion — food giveaways will have had to increase fivefold, to the yearly equivalent of 40 million to 50 million tons of grain. The rich countries have never achieved the aid target of 10 million tons a year they set in 1974. Their grain aid stands at about 8 million tons, of which the United States supplies up to two-thirds and the Euro-pean Community 22 percent.

New agricultural technologies could double world output by the turn of the century. But as things stand, Third World countries will have to double grain imports by then to keep up with population growth. The situation is not improved by the poor countries' tendency to fix food prices at low levels to help consumers, not producers: There is, in any case, a powerful economic argument in favor of food aid. The cost of buying grain has already become as crippling a part of the poor countries' debt burden as oil imports. The International Food Policy Research Institute, source of much testimony to the Brandt Commission, reported recently that food aid is now less than in 1960; the and is now less than in 1960; the developing countries' grain purchases abroad have had to quadruple during that period, and now cost them $21 billion a year.

The EC Commission has sought since 1982 to reform community food policy from its traditional characters. policy from its traditional character as a funnel for unwanted surpluses. Its success has been limited: Two-Its success has been limited: Two-thirds of EC aid is still dairy produce, which is less practical than grain, and grain aid is less than one-tenth of the community's overproduction. The rest helps to fuel Europe's nagging trade war with the United States by glutting the international market

It is impossible to ignore the administrative barriers and economic market complexities that make dramatic boosts to food aid difficult. Nevertheless, these should not be a respectable cloak for inaction. International Herald Tribune.

different. It is this policy of striking a difficult balance that is compromised today.

- The Hong Kong Standard

The international sense of desolation at themurder of Indira Gandhi is not merely a measure of the fact that the largest democracy has lost its elected leader to the gunmen's bullets. It is a measure of the stature of Mrs. Gandhi herself. India's prime minister, for all her shortcomings, was a world leader. She held the most awesomely difficult of jobs and it will be deeply surprising if history does not come to exalt not merely her political skills, but her sense of India's place and destiny.

- The Guardian (London).

It is not difficult to draw up for judgment a list of failings (to our eyes), of mistakes, of nuthlessness, of nepotism, of misconduct to ward opposition. The government of India under Mrs. Gandhi was a hybrid: autocracy within a democratic framework. But some of these failings have to be laid against the question perpetually asked through [Britain's] framing of India's constitution: Was it possible in a country so disparate, so divided by blood, by politics and above all by religion, to create a viable federal structure? With her death and what may come after it that question looms again.

— The Daily Telegraph (London).

Mrs. Gandhi was often reproached for using a heavy hand against her opponents and for conducting a far from tolerant democracy. The fact remains that she concentrated in her hands a degree of power which, for lack of a credible alternative, constituted a factor of stability in Asia. China, for one, made no mistake about it. Despite its own disagreements with New Delhi, it took pains to improve its relationship with India and took care to practice a balanced diplomacy on the subcontinent that was very respectful of Mrs. Ghandi's authority. The approaches of Moscow and Washington were not fundamentally — Le Monde (Paris).

Although Mrs. Gandhi succeeded in leading India into the nuclear age in 1974 and into the space age in 1980, she was forced to come back, again and again, to the age-old problems of intercommunal strife, caste, poverty, starvation and an exploding population. In the end it was the volatile religious issue that was believed to have brought her assassination, an echo from India's past

- The Bangkok Post.

Rajiv Gandhi is far from universally acknowledged as the best man for the job. And there lies the problem. Is he up to it? When he entered politics in 1980 after the death of his brother, Sanjay, he set out to rid Indian politics of its image of corruption and horsetrading. To date he has not succeeded.

This does not augur well for a new prime minister who has to lead India's ruling Congress Party to the hustings in just eight weeks. The possibilities confronting the new prime minister are truly dire.

No, the more important question - and the more worrying - is whether the Supreme Court will give any real scrutiny at all to what pres dents do in the name of national security. Recent cases have suggested that a president need only raise the flag of security and he can do anything: stop an American from speaking, from traveling, whatever,

Thirty years ago Harry Truman invoked national security when he seized the nation's steel mills to prevent a strike during the Korean War. The Supreme Court said he could not do that in the absence of authority from Congress. Would the court look hard at a president's authority in such a case today? To doubt it — and I do doubt it - is to say that our constitu-dent Eisenhower warned against "un-warranted influence ... by the mili-tary-industrial complex." How long ago that seems, how quaint the ideals of a career military man, how small the weapons that worried him. Americans under 50 cannot be expected even to know this, but until World War II this country never had a big standing army or armaments industry. That new combination, Mr. Eisenhower said, of "an immense military establishment and a large arms industry" was "new in the American experience" and had "grave implications." The reason why he spoke out so forcefully was explained recently by Jerome Wiesner, a former scientific adviser in the White House, writing in the Boston Globe Magazine. Ike was frustrated at his inability to resist "the combined impact of pressures from the military, industry, Congress, journalists and veterans' organizaions to buy more weapons."

Since then we have built infinitely more dangerous weapons by the thousands, and we are less secure than we were. The pressures that wor-ned Dwight Eisenhower have grown far stronger, and we have a president now who thinks that refusal to build any proposed weapon amounts to nilateral disarmament."
"The United States has been running an arms race with itself," Mr. Wiesner said, "and in the process has become a military culture — a society in which an arms race is accepted as a way of life ... We seem absolutely trapped in a delusional system that grips us more year by year."

Debate Punch-Lines

In his Oct. 23 news analysis, "Chalenger Fails to Land Knockout Punch," David S. Broder goes beyond giving his personal reaction to the presidential debate. We are told that Walter Mondale effectively lost all possibility of winning the election because although he "won" the de-bate his win was insufficiently decisive. This opinion was not based on any poll of television viewers but on the reaction of the network commentators. Before anyone had a chance to reflect on the issues and the presentation of the candidates, the commentators were telling them what their thinking should have been. The next day, journalists were reporting on the

Mr. Broder's analysis and the re-

Perhaps he should have said it was PanAms New Clipper Class. The Million Dollar Experience.

One million dollars. That is how much we are spending on refurbishing each Pan Am 747.

Our objective was to make Pan Am Clipper® Class simply the best in the business.

To do this we set about totally redesigning it. In fact little of the old Clipper Class remains.

No longer is there, as with other airlines, one separate business cabin. The new Clipper Class has three. We thought that would give you more privacy.

Out With The Old, In With The New.

Then we threw out the eight-across seating. Now it's just six. And, unlike other major transatlantic carriers, they're individual seats purpose-built for business class.

Out too go the overhead bins. Now Superbin comes to the rescue of travellers with large hand luggage. Six times bigger, these new bins can take suitcases standing or garment bags laying flat.

movie buffs needn't worry, in its place is a brand new Sony video system.

However, Clipper doesn't just look better, it sounds better too, with the addition of new electronic headsets. So wherever you sit you'll have the best seat in the house.

When it's time for dining there's a whole new experience for you to enjoy. Separate courses served on real china. It's like stepping back in time to the gracious days of flying.

But the benefits of travelling Pan Am Clipper Class aren't all aboard the 747.

On arrival at the airport you go straight to your own separate check-in.

If you're going to New York there's a free helicopter from JFK to East 60th Street, Wall Street or Newark Airport. No other airline has its own helicopter service.

Meeting our evening New York flight from Heathrow is a free limousine to chauffeur you from JFK to your hotel in Manhattan.

Both of these services leave from the same terminal, the one that you arrive at, our very own Pan Am Worldport®

Be sure to book one of them when you make your reservation.

From Worldport you can also catch Pan Am flights all over America.

It is the only terminal to have both international and internal U.S. flights all under the one roof.

There has been much talk lately, from the Reagan administration and elsewhere, of a less

But many analysts believe economic and credit conditions are ripe for the Fed to become more aggressive once the election is over. The money supply has been growing only slowly of late. The central bank's weekly reported issued after the stock market closed Thursday showed that the basic measure of the money supply over the past 13 weeks averaged only a 2.2 percent rate of gain.

Irwin began developing his personal style as a reaction against his acting training at the University of California, Los Angeles. "I felt restless, confined by the realistic theater around us," he recalled. "I was looking for a more physical form. I'm fascinated by Kabuki, by Indonesian theater. When Irwin realized the caller was genuine, and that he had won one of the awards, he was so shocked he forgot exactly how much money he received. "I just know," he said. "that it's a nice chunk that'll come in the mail every month for five years."

With the prestige and the money — somewhere between $176,000 and $300,000 over five years for each of the 25 recipients — came particular honor for Irwin. He is the first active performing artist to receive a MacArthur Foundation fellowship in the four years the awards have been given.

The honor roughly coincides with Irwin's Broadway debut in Dario Fo's "Accidental Death of an Anarchist," opening Nov. 15 at the Belasco. Fo, twice barred from the United States by immigration officials, has been granted a visa in time for the opening.

But Irwin is best known for his personal fusion of mime and comedy, seen in New York in the Dance Theater Workshop's "New Mime" series and "Regard of Flight" at the American Place Theater. In those shows, Irwin harkened to such diverse influences as Jackie Gleason, Buster Keaton and The Living Theater. He is surely the first MacArthur Fellow to have studied at both Oberlin College and the Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey Circus's College of Clowns.

Restaurants: The Personal Touch

by Patricia Wells

ARIS — Thank goodness life repeats itself. As soon as one thinks that all the great old Paris bistros are dead or nearing their last gasp, a new crop of tiny, personalized restaurants pop up, with zany, lovable characters manning the stoves and waiting the tables.

Walking into L'Assiette, a year-old, fivetable restaurant tucked into the space once occupied by a charcuterie, is like walking into the stage set for a Parisian bistro of the 1930s. There are the etched-glass windows, plain wooden chairs and tables, tile floors that look like a crazy quilt and, of course, Lulu. Bony, effervescent Lulu, with her navy beret, mismatched socks, rubber-soled work shoes and a mouth that closes only long enough to take a quick breath.

She is one of those tiny, amazingly energetic characters who exhaust you by their very presence. Raised on a farm in the Southwest, Lucette Rousseau is as proud as can be of her little enterprise. She is a oneperson show, handling the thrice-weekly trips to the central market at Rungis, the menu-planning, the cooking, the telephone and the clean-up with less than a handful of helpers. And, as one would imagine, she's off-the-wall passionate about food.

"How do you like the marquise au chocolat?" she asks one diner.

"I finished making it between cooking your marcassin and his coquille," she says with a bit of well-deserved bragging. Lulu offers solid, classic bistro fare, adding, of course, her own personality. She har-bors a fondness for wild mushrooms and game, thinks her bouillabaisse is out of this world and eagerly invites the entire contents of the restaurant back for next week's civet de lièvre. Her fricassée de cèpes is earthy, generous and showered with healthy chunks of garlic; her servings of meaty, spicy mar-cassin big enough to satisfy at least two hearty diners, and her desserts are artisanal and barely correct: a sadly out of season charlotte aux fraises, and a pleasant marquise au chocolar. The house Bourgueil is just fine, and the theater worth the price of admission. One fears that the energy and simplicity won't last. So reserve a table while Lulu's hot, and enjoy.

THEN a chef one respects recommends not once, but twice, that you try another restaurant, one would be a fool not to sit up and take notice. Alain Dutournier of the Trou Gascon is in love with La Cagonille, and one can see why. Owner Gerard Allemandou — a bear of a man with a hearty laugh and a fine sense of humor — holds court here with flair, adding life and atmosphere to the tiny, bare-bones, aggressively undecorated restaurant he named after the land snail found in his great fish, great butter and, of course, Co-gnac, and you will find all of them here in adundance.

The menu, handwritten in chalk on an old blackboard is virtually indecipherable. But it's there for show as much as anything else. "Are you going to eat what I want you to eat, or what you want to eat?" Allemandou demands right out. The rillettes of mackerel, the simple grilled turbot, the salad of smoked haddock and spinach, the poached baby bar, no bigger than sardines, all sound too good to take a chance at pot luck. I have rarely tasted fish so impeccably fresh, so untouched by sauces or seasoning. (It would be nice if one could add a shake of salt, a turn of pepper, if one wished, but they are not on the table.) The thick slices of country bread are incredibly delicious and the wine list is worth a few visits on its own merit. There's an excellent Sancerre, fine white Graves and Muscadet, and what may well be the city's largest collection of rare Cognac.

L'Assiette, 181 Rue du Chateau, Paris 14; tel: 322.64.86. Closed Saturday bunch and Monday. Credit cards: American Express, Diners Club, Visa. About 150 francs a person; including wine and service.

La Cagonálie, 89 Rue Daguerre, Paris 14; tel: 322.09.01. Closed Sunday and Monday. No credit cards. About 170 francs a person, including wine and service.

Remembering Jim Morrison

Fans at Jim Morrison's grave.

& flee the swarming wisdom of the streets

by Christopher Pala

ARIS — The words were written a decade and a half ago by Jim Morrison, the vocalist of The Doors rock group, who died in Paris in 1971 at the age of 28.

They still have meaning for Morrison's latter-day fans, who have turned his grave in the staid Père Lachaise cemetery into a shrine to the 1960s, a meeting place for young rebels and a problem for the cemetery administrators.

His grave, including a life-size marble bust sculpted by a fan, is covered with graffiti and so are the two-dozen nearest ones.

Inscriptions range from "Jim Is Alive" to the intriguing "My spy is in California and He knows." There are lyrics from Doors hits, such as, appropriately, "This is the End," "Before I sink into the deep sleep, I want to hear the scream of the butterfly" and the poem that inspired the band's name, attributed by his biographers to William Blake:
"There are things that are known and there are things that are unknown and between, there are doors."

There are usually flowers on Morrison's grave, often lifted from other graves by a steady stream of 1980s versions of flower children who stand around quietly, exchange shy smiles and nods, share an occasional wine bottle or marijuana joint and play Doors music on cassette recorders.

The grave, littered with cigarette butts and empty bottles, clashes with its neatly kept surroundings: 108 acres of tree-shaded slop-ing hills where Chopin, Wilde, Balzac, Bizet, Piaf and others rest.

But the Morrison fans - some are tourists, others regulars - have little interest in the other residents of Père Lachaise: what they seek is a whiff of an age when dissent was the norm, when young people could think in terms of Us vs. Them, and Morrison could make their blood race by shouting.
"We want the world and we want it . . .

Marella Buckley, a slender brunette of 17 with wide, searching blue eyes, grew up in Cork, Ireland, knowing somehow that "We don't need money to be happy."

"This place left me speechless," she said.
"All the people who left the messages make me feel my impulses against work were justi-A blonde woman from Michigan who did not want to be identified said, "I resent the fact that my parents had me in '65. I missed everything — I'm a sixties person stuck in the sterile eighties." "I don't think he's really dead," she said.

Neither did another visitor, Karen van der Valt, 23, of Pretoria. "I think he got sick of people leeching on him and broke away and faked the story of his own death," she said. How Morrison died remains in doubt.

His girlfriend, Pamela Courson, said she found him dead in a bathtub in their Marais apartment on the morning of July 3, 1971. His manager, Bill Siddons, arrived from Los Angeles on July 6. He said he was met by a sealed coffin and a certificate that listed the cause of death as a heart attack, though no autopsy was made.

ORRISON was buried at Père La-chaise on July 7 by a half-dozen friends, and it wasn't until Siddons returned to Los Angeles on July 9 that he announced the death publicly.

The initial news of his death was kept quiet," Siddons said, to "avoid the notoriety and circus-like atmosphere that surrounded the deaths of such rock personalities as Janis Joplin and Jimi Hendrix. Jerry Hopkins and Danny Sugarman, authors of the Morrison biography "No One Here Gets Out Alive," said Morrison, a long-time alcoholic, could have died naturally: "His body was old and his soul was tired."

They also raised questions about whether or not he died. Faking his own death to get away from "an image he'd outgrown but couldn't live down" was "perfectly in keep-ing with his unpredictable character," the authors concluded.

Probably only Courson knew, and she died three years after Morrison. His was an image of raw sexuality, of burning defiance, of a blend of theater and poetry that made one rock reviewer call The Doors at their late-1960s peak "the most soon."

dramatic group on the road today." It also led to a Mismi trial on charges that included exposing himself during a concert.

It was an image Morrison came to Paris to shed in March 1971. He wanted to write poetry. He had already published two slim volumes himself, including "An American Prayer," from which the poem at the top is excerpted. The stardom he fled returned years after he died. Some trace it to the use in 1979 of one of The Doors' most famous songs, "The End," in the film "Apocalypse Now."

On the 10th anniversary of his death, Rolling Stone magazine did a cover story on him entitled "Hot, Sexy and Dead." Elektra Records, the group's label, sold more disks in the first half of 1981 than in any year when Morrison was alive, though the group often took and held the top of the charts.

The boom is continuing, said Elektra's vice president for International, Bill Berger, in a telephone interview from New York. "Sales have been incredible in the last four years," he said.

"The Doors just keep on turning on new generations," he said. "Alive and Well," the latest Doors album, which includes Morrislatest Doors album, which includes the said. son, "just went platinum," selling more than a million copies.

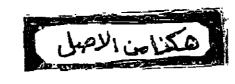

But at the management building of Père Lachaise, Morrison's popularity is no cause for joy. Catherine Letourneur, the cemetery's deputy curator, said the fans "come to drug themselves and get drunk, which is not very appropriate for a cemetery. It's the only grave that poses a problem for us." Scowling plainclothes policemen stop by once a day, confiscate wine bottles and force everyone to

In 1980, a previous curator asked for the transfer of Morrison's remains, saying "The situation is intolerable."

The grave is leased in perpetuity, and suc a move is impossible without consent of the next of kin. Morrison's family — his fath was once the youngest admiral in the U. Navy — have not been in touch, said it present curator, Guy Martin.

Otherwise, we can only move him if grave is abandoned, and that," Martin a grave is abandoned, and the color ed with a wry smile, "is not going to hap.

What's Doing in Salzburg

by Paul Hofmann

ALZBURG — The famous conductors and artists, the well-heeled festival audiences, the celebrity watchers and the tourists have gone. Now is the time to explore and enjoy Mozart's city. nestled beneath three steep hills on the banks of the Salzach River.

In autumn, Salzburg sheds much of the osmopolitan trappings, snobbery and commercialism that envelop it during its bigname summer and becomes itself again: the small capital of an Austrian region that ranges from a delightful lake district to maiestic Alpine peaks.

Off-season Salzburg (population: 145,000) is an engaging blend of provincialism, good living, cordiality and cultural sophistication. Many hotels stay open all year and offer reduced rates. There is plenty of music in the concert halls, the churches and the Landestheater.

In winter, when the mountains on the horizon turn white and snow laces the ancient fortress, local children gawk at the booths of the pre-Christmas market in Cathedral Square, while troupes of singers from the mountain villages stroll through the narrow streets, wearing historic costumes and chanting Advent carols.

An increasing number of winter sports enthusiasts make Salzburg their temporary headquarters. Others come for Salzburg's celebrated waters, which were praised by Paracelsus, the Renaissance physician and alchemist whose stame stands behind the Kurhaus, the modern municipal spa.

Much of Salzburg's architectural splendor is the heritage from a long line of prince-archbishops who ruled the city and its region from the High Middle Ages until 1803. These ecclesiastical lords built the Hohensalzburg, the fortress that dominates the city. as well as the cathedral, the other churches and the Renaissance and Baroque palaces that helped Salzburg become known as the "German Rome."

This year Salzburg is commemorating the 1,200th anniversary of the death of St. Vigil, an Irish missionary who was the city's bishop from A.D. 747 to 784, St. Vigil founded Salzburg's first cathedral and helped make the city a beacon of civilization in the Dark Ages. A solemn requiem for the saint will be celebrated in the Salzburg Cathedral Nov. 27, the day of his death.

LTHOUGH Wolfgang Amadeus left Salzburg as a young man, and after-ward showed little nostalgia for his birthplace, it's Mostly Mozart in the city today. The local music academy is called the Mozarteum; the composer's name and the names of characters in his operas recur (Café Pamina, for instance) around the city, and his likeness, powdered wig and all, adorns candy wrappers, crockery and other items. Despite the mercantile overkill, Mozart devotees will feel a shiver of emotion upon entering the narrow old house, at 9 Getreidegasse, where the composer was born on Jan. 27, 1756, and lived until he was 7. On display in the three-story building, which is now a museum, are a clavichord and a hammerclavier on which Mozart played; his small first violin; models of productions of his operas, and other memorabilia. Open daily from 9 A.M. to 6 P.M.

Getreidegasse, on the southern (left) bank of the Salzach, is the city's main shopping street and is closed to traffic.

The Mozart family house, at 8 Makart-plazz, on the right bank, was rebuilt after suffering heavy damage during World War II. In this building, where Mozart lived from 1773 to 1780, the Dancing Master's Room has been preserved as a museum. It contains the painting by Johann N. de la Croce showing Wolfgang Amadeus and his sister Nannerl at the clavichord, their father playing the violin.

Mozart's small summer house, where the composer reputedly wrote "The Magic Flute," was long ago transferred from Vienna to Salzburg and can be visited in a garden at the back of the Mozarteum, 26 Schwarzstrasse. To arrange a visit, telephone the Mozarteum at 73154, or see it during the intermission of a concert at the Mozarteum.

The Mozart family grave, where the composer's father is buried, is in St. Sebastian Cemetery, 41 Linzergasse.

HE cathedral, built between 1614 and 1628 by Santino Solari, is regarded as the purest example of Italian style north of the Alps. Cathedral Square (Domplatz), enclosed by arcades, is the setting for festival performances and other events. Adjoining it is the Residenz, the former residence of the archbishops, whose opulent halls can be visited at 10 and 11 A.M. and 2 and 3 P.M. Monday through Friday, at 10 and 11 A.M. Saturday and Sunday. The gallery within contains 200 European paintings, including some Rembrandts and Ti-tians. Open from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. daily. The Hohensalzburg, atop the 1,778-foot-high Mönchsberg (Monks' Mountain), can be climbed in about 30 minutes or reached by funicular, which runs every 10 minutes during the day. Both routes depart from the Festungsgasse, east of the Church of St.

The 900-year-old forcess contains vast chambers with Gothic carvings and marble reliefs, a court room, a Justice Hall (which the guides call the "torture chamber"), a chapel and the so-called Salzburg Steer, a mechanical organ built in 1502 which is still played three times a day. Guided tours of the fortress are conducted every half hour between 9:30 A.M. and 3:30 P.M.

Salzburg's festival theaters — a modern complex that includes two indoor theaters and the Felsenreitschule, the former riding school with galleries that were hewn in the living rock of Mönchsberg nearly 300 years ago — can be visited during non-lestival months at 3 P.M. Monday through Friday.

11 A.M. Saturday. Participants for guided tours gather at 1 Hofstallgasse.

The Mirabell Palace, built in 1606 by Prince-Archbishop Wolf Dietrich for his mistress, on the right bank of the Salzach. now houses the mayor's office. Its showy Marble Hall is used for civil weddings and concerts. Visitors may wander in and marvel at the extravagant main staircase.

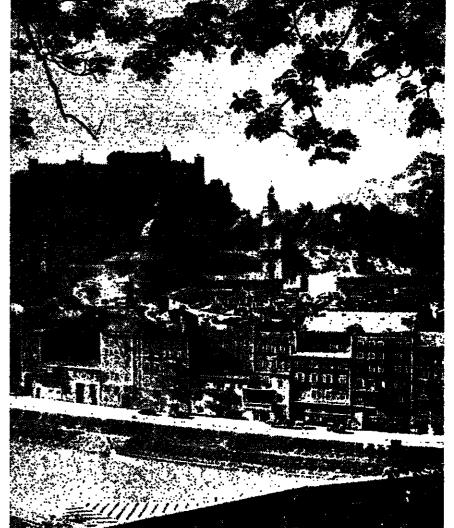

The fare on Salzburg's trolley buses is 10 schillings (about 50 cents); children half price. Frequent buses to many winter sports centers in the region leave from the main railroad station and from Mirabellplatz, where schedules are displayed.

T the Landestheater, 22 Schwarzstrasse, operetta and an occasional A strasse, operate with legitimate drama during the winter. Frequent concerts and recitals are held elsewhere in the city. From Jan. 17 to 25 at the Mozarteum there is the annual Mozart Week festival and International Mozart Competition for singers, pianists and violinists, and Herbert von Karajan presides over the Salzburg Easter Festival, April 14-23, and the Whitsun concerts, June 9-11.

Puppet versions of Mozart operas will be presented around Christmas by the charm-Salzburger Marionetten-Theater, 24 hwarzstrasse. Tickets range from the equivalent of about $9.50 to $16.

The Max Reinhardt Research and Memorial Institute has scheduled a special exhibition on the celebrated theater director from Jan. 1 to June 24.

The city's leading hotel is Oesterrei-chischer Hof, 5-7 Schwarzstrasse (telephone 72541), overlooking the river and the old city. Off-season rates for a double room with bath range from the equivalent of about $48 to $105. Here, as in all Salzburg hotels, rates include continental breakfast. At the Sheraton Salzburg, 4 Auerspergstrasse (79321), adjoining the Mirabell Gardens, a double room with bath ranges from $60 to $80. The Europa, 31 Rainerstrasse (73293), is a modern high-rise structure near the railroad station with splendid vistas from the upper rooms and the top-floor restaurant. A dou-ble with bath is $51.50. The Hohenstauffen, 19 Elisabethstrasse (72193), has double rooms with bath or shower at $38 to $47.

Salzburg cuisine is solidly Alpine, heavy on pork chops, schnitzel, sausages, dump-lings, potatoes, cabbage and sauerkraut. Trout is widely available. A local specialty is Salzburger nockerl, a dessert souffle of eggs, sugar and flour, with a puffy golden crust and a creamy center. It should be ordered at the beginning of the meal and is available at almost all the city's restaurants for about 60 to 80 schillings for two. Salzburg is proud of its excellent beer from the local Stieglbrau brewery. Try Stieglkeller, 10 Festungsgasse (42681), the historic site of the brewery, where a dinner of liver dumpling soup, grilled meats, french fries and salads, with beer, for two, runs between 400 and 500 schillings. A new deluxe eating place, the Mirabell Restaurant in the Sheraton Salzburg, offers a buffet lunch featuring a choice of hors d'oeuvres, soups, entrees and desserts, all at about 200 schillings with a carafe of wine. Moderate prices and good Austrian and imported wines can be had at Weinhaus Moser, 3 Wiener-Philharmonikergasse (4) 136).

In Salzburg, as in Vienna, the coffeehouse is an important part of daily life. Don't miss the elegant 280-year-old Cafe Tomaselli, 9 Alter Markt (44488), which is open daily from 8 A.M. to 9 P.M. and has many local and foreign newspapers. Also try Cafe Glockenspiel, 2 Mozartplatz (41403). Most coffeehouses also serve some food and alcoholic beverages.

Café-Restaurant Winkler, on the Mönchsberg (41215), commands a panorama of the city and the Alps and operates a gambling casino. Open daily, except Monday, 11 A.M. to midnight.

More information on the city may be obtained from the Salzburg City Tourist Bureau (7 Auerspergstrasse, A-5024 Salzburg, Austria; 74620), and at Austrian national tourist offices in major cities.

The Merchant of Prato

by James M. Johnson

The cathedral towers, seen from Residenzplatz.

PRATO, Italy — The Tuscans are a race of string-savers who squired away virtually everything that comes to hand, apparently on the principle that what is useless today may serve some purpose tomorrow and what is valuable now may sometime be worth even

The Tuscan penchant for keeping every scrap has often paid off. A good example of the trait and its benefits is the trove of documents diligently stashed away nearly 600 years ago in a private home here in this textile and light-industry center 19 kilometers (12 miles) northwest of Florence.

Prato's industrialization and ring of ugly suburbs have tended to discourage tourists. However, at its urban core is a remarkable collection of ancient walls, medieval and Renaissance private palaces and churches and a 13th-century castle.

One of those well-preserved structures houses the personal and business letters and documents of Francesco di Marco Datini, a merchant who directed an international trading empire in the 14th and 15th centuries. The cache includes 150,000 letters, more than 500 registers and account books, 300 contracts, 400 insurance policies and thousands of exchange receipts and "checks.

Altogether, the papers provide valuable insights into life and commerce in Europe and especially Italy during the late medieval, early Renaissance period. Datini was born in 1335 at Prato and he and a brother, who apparently died young, were orphaned by the plague of 1348. In 1350, at the age of 15, he left home to make his way in the world of trade.

He eventually established himself at Avignon, in southern France, where the presence of the papal court provided numerous lucrative opportunities for an enterprising merchant. He was soon trading on a major scale, buying and selling goods in the Middle East, Italy, France, Spain and elsewhere. He became extremely wealthy and, once the documented. However, that aspect of the popes had moved back to Rome, he decided collection has been badly neglected, for the Prato, where he had a fine town house as well as numerous suburban and country properties, was his home until his death in 1410. Datini and his Florentine wife, Margherita, had no children, and the merchant left his estate to the poor people of his native town. The pious foundation thus created, which still exists, was headquartered in Datini's palazzo and no doubt that fact accounts for the structure's preservation.

In 1870, a recess was discovered that had been walled up, apparently soon after Da-tini's death. In it were the documents the merchant had accumulated throughout much of his career. While the papers deal with innumerable aspects of 14th-century commerce, they also provide a wealth of information about the private lives of the well-to-do of the period.

Scholars have been mining this trove since its discovery. For several years now, a team of professors has been entering the docu-ments in a computer and subjecting them to systematic analysis. As part of the project, the marks used by Datini's merchant-correspondents are being cataloged. The result should be a more comprehensive under-standing of medieval trade. The papers also supplied material for a book, "The Merchant of Prato," by Iris Origo, published in 1957. The domestic side of Datini's life is well-nai letters have never been publish Only the letters from Datini's friend and notary, Ser Lapo Mazzei, have been published in full — in 1880.

There are numerous notes from Datini's doctor, who advises the merchant to reduce his intake of rich foods and get more exercise. The letters are models of sound medical advice, as applicable today as 600 years ago and just as steadily ignored.

Datini's recalcitrance is explained in let-ters he wrote in 1372: "I will not still be treated like a boy and will not feed on half a pound of kid in a little pot meet for small fish. This time I would have the great cooking pot." He got the big pot and chronic indigestion along with it.

Look to it," he ordered that same year,

"that I find fowls in abundance, for I propose not to live as I did before." In short, he left Prato poor and was returning rich.

N Datini's time, the Renaissance was in full swing and Masaccio, Gozzoli, Castagno, Fra Angelico, Ghirlandaio and Piero della Francesca, among others, were slapping paint on walls and panels throughout Tuscany. Datini, from Avignon, ordered paintings by size, subject and price in nearly the same terms he used for cloth or preserved fruits. It was all merchandise to him.

However, Datini was not entirely insensitive to art, or at least to its value in advertis-ing his wealth and importance. He had his Prato home frescoed by reputable painters. Many of the works have survived and are displayed at his palazzo, which is open to the public every morning except Sunday.

The Datini archives are housed in the fine.

medieval building next door to the merchant's home. They are not usually available to the public, but the attendant at the Datini residence proudly shows visitors a letter or two and the book of well-preserved and elegantly executed drawings Datini had made of his properties and farmhouses.

TWA Backs Down on Low Fare in U.S.

by Ronald Katz

ARIS — The French civil aviation authority has forced Trans World Airlines to modify its TWAIR Pass. a special fare for European residents visiting the United States this winter. The fare, cited in a report on similar cut-rate packages in the Weekend of Oct. 26, would have permitted European residents to visit up to eight American cities for 999 French francs (about $107) provided they also flew TWA trans-Atlantic. It has been replaced by a new fare, allowing up to 12 flights within the United States, of 2,249 French francs (about $240).

TWA officials maintained at a press conference Wednesday, that the major point at issue was the French government's assertion that the fare represented an international rather than a U.S. domestic fare, as TWA had claimed. TWA's general manager for France, H. A. Schaible, expressed surprise at .

pate in the trans-Atlantic leg of the voyage.

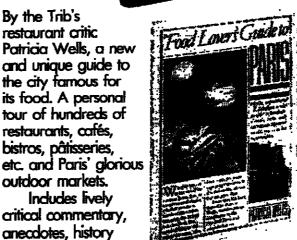

The dispute, which has been escalating for several weeks, had recently turned ugly. Determined to capture a larger share of the North Atlantic market, TWA had offered four different versions of its TWAIR Pass, each of which had been rejected by the French authorities. The U.S. Civil Aviation Board on Oct. 19 agreed with TWA that opening the trans-Atlantic leg to all carriers made the fare a domestic one. The French disagreed, however, and last Friday French officials began questioning TWA passengers during the check-in process and threatening to prevent the flights from leaving Paris. Eventually the airline backed down.

TWA says it will honor all tickets purchased at the original price and says it modified its fares "under protest." There is some chance the prices could change again after a Dec. 10 meeting of the European Civil Avia-the French position, particularly after TWA altered its original plan to allow Air France as well as other scheduled carriers to particithe fare at 999 francs, or the equivalent in other currencies, can no longer be sold for TWA flights leaving France, Italy or West Germany, TWA said it still applied in Belgium. In other countries, travelers are counseled to check with travel agencies or airline tights of figure.

> This is not the first time passengers have become enmeshed in the tangled politics of international air transport. The British government, angered over the U.S. antitrust suit against U.K. carriers in the Laker case, last week canceled a broad range of low-fare tickets for trans-Atlantic travel.

Asked if passengers could continue to expect sudden changes in ticket prices, TWA's Schaible responded, "As long as other countries continue to feel the pressures of American deregulation, we will all be living in a time of uncertainty."

and local lore. A great gift idea. Paperback, over 300 pages with 140 evocative photographs.

Compact Disk Has NewRole Change As Data-Storage Device

By ANDREW POLLACK

EW YORK — The compact disk, known mostly for high quality musical recordings, is about to appear in makers of compact disks and players think the same systems that provide high quality digital sound could also be used to deliver reams of computer data or software.

A single disk 4.7 inches (12 centimeters) in diameter, can hold

A single disk, 4.7 inches (12 centimeters) in diameter, can hold 550 million bytes, or characters, the equivalent of more than 100,000 typewritten pages. That is 1,000 times as much as a slightly larger floppy disk and 50 times as much as a typical hard computer disk.

"It's 50 feet of bookshelves on one little disk," said John C. Messerschmitt, vice president of North American Phil-

The disadvantage is that the compact disks have the same limitation as phonograph records: The information stored on them cannot be erased and new information cannot be recorded. That means the new CD-ROM's, for "compact disk read-only memories," cannot replace floppy or hard disks but must find new uses. There is doubt about how big the market will be.

"They're all shooting at the same unidentified area of application," said James N. Porter, president of Disk/Trend Inc., a Los Altos, California, market-research concern in this field.

THE makers of compact-disk players, mainly Japanese companies, are eager to find new markets for their product because the digital audio-disk players have done only moderately well since reaching the market in 1982.

Philips NV, the Dutch electronics giant, has already announced a CD-ROM player. Last week Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing Co. said it had purchased equipment to start making the disks next year. Japan's Hitachi Ltd. has also demonstrated a player, while Sony Corp., also of Japan, is expected to enter the market and perhaps supply a system to Apple Comput-

The compact-disk systems use tiny lasers to read digital information encoded in tiny pits on a disk. The same optical-storage technology is also used in the laser videodisk systems and is starting to appear in disk drives for large computers.

Going from Beethoven to bits requires only slight changes in the compact disk systems. The main difference is that special circuitry must be added to the computer version to reduce the error rate. In music disks, an error merely produces a blip that is inaudible in the flow of music. In a computer program, a single error can bring the system to a halt.

Nevertheless, the systems are similar enough for CD-ROM systems to take advantage of the economies of scale in making the systems to take advantage of the economies of scale in making the consumer product. Consumer players now sell for several hundred dollars and the disks for about $15. CD-ROM systems should eventually be close to those prices.

CD-ROM supporters envision numerous uses, mainly in electronic publishing. Huge data bases, such as financial data on all corporations, could be published on one of the disks.

Such data are often now stored in central computer data bases, and information is retrieved by connecting with the central computer. But having such information on a disk would allow users to avoid the high charges for connecting to data bases. Publishers of such data bases would conceivably mail subscribers Publishers of such data bases would conceivably mail subscribers a new disk with updated information periodically. But most up-

Bank Law Is Backed

Fed Must Clear Interstate Rule

WASHINGTON -- Despite vigorous congressional opposition, the Comptroller of the Currency ap-proved Thursday the first 29 appli-cations for banks to establish branches across state lines, leaving final clearance to the Federal Re-

If the Fed agrees with the comp-troller, C.T. Conover, that a loophole in Depression-era banking law is big enough to allow the first widespread interstate banking in the United States, the changes would bring a controversial new era in banking.

Among the applications approved Thursday are for New York's Citicorp to establish banks in Springdale, Ohio and King of Prussia, Pennsylvania.

New York's Chase Manhattan Corp. would be allowed to set up banks in Bloomington, Minnesota, and Bala Cynwyd, Pennsylvania.

companies. More than 300 other applications are pending. Mr. Conover ignored warnings from the chairmen of the House and Senate banking committees let Congress decide whether to close the legal loophole, saying Congress already had its chance earlier in 1984. The "non-bank banks" look like any other banks, except in a courtroom. There, in several cases already decided, they were approved for operation across state lines be-cause they do not both grant com-mercial loans and accept deposits.

Of the 29 newly approved appli-cations, 17 are for banks that would not make commercial loans, known as consumer banks, and 12 will not accept demand deposits.

Ford to Get Design-Oriented Chief

Petersen Is Seen As New Breed of Auto Executive

By John Holusha New York Times Service DETROIT — Donald E. Petersen vividly remembers the day in 1949 when he and a slightly senior executive of Ford Motor Co. met with the company's chief engineer to suggest that the product planning department they were establishing should get involved in designing future car

"Well, after I picked myself up off the curb and brushed myself off, I told my boss that we had some convincing to do," he said, recalling the incident.

"At that time most of the engineers were master mechanics up from the shop floor," he went on.
"They decided what was needed

They decided what was needed for the next year, did it, and told the sales department. This is the new model.

Product planning of course, has grown greatly in importance from the days when new car designs were solely the province of technicians. And Mr. Petersen who was a bright young engineer with an MBA degree from Stan-ford University when he was hired to set up the product planning office, has risen with it.

Mr. Petersen, who will become chairman and chief executive officer of the world's second-largest automobile company on Feb. 1, is viewed by many in the in-dustry as the first of a new wave of top auto executives who are more concerned about products and production systems than fi-nancial analysis.

"He's clearly hardware orient-ed," said Martin L. Anderson, one of the authors of the recent "Future of the Automobile" study prepared at the Massachu-setts Institute of Technology. "He's a straight shooter, a 'let's get things done' sort of guy." Donald Eugene Petersen was born in Pipestone, Minnesota, on Sept. 4, 1926. The family moved to Long Beach, California, when he was two years old and later to Portland, Oregon, where he attended high school and played on the football and basketball teams. He graduated from the University of Washington in 1946 with a bachelor's gauge guy and a wonderful degree in mechanical engineer-choice to be the chairman of an ing and a Phi Beta Kappa key. After a year of working on a farm to earn money, he enrolled at Stanford, earning his MBA in 1949 and joining Ford Motor upon graduation. He and his wife, Jo Anne, live in Bloomfield

Hills, Michigan.
Mr. Petersen has already had an important impact on the shape of millions of cars bearing the Ford emblem. According to company sources, one of the first things he did after becoming president in March 1980 was to meet with the design staff and ask them if they were pleased with the appearance of the cars then on sale. The answer was overwhelmingly "no."

So he told them to strike out in new directions, without fear that innovations would be rejected by conservative review committees. The results of that gamble, to break away from the accepted standards of automotive design. are the sleek, aerodynamic Thunderbird, Tempo and Lin-coln Mark VII models that have helped Ford increase its share of the U.S. car market by 1.1 per-centage points, to 18.1 percent, in the past year alone.

"He is an open minded, broad-automobile company," said Da-vid E. Davis Jr., editor of Car & Driver, a magazine for auto en-thusiasts that has often been critical of domestic car companies. "The conventional wisdom was that he could not get the job because he was not a finance man. I thought he'd get it on sheer managerial ability."

One of Mr. Petersen's contributions to the corporate culture at Ford has been to impress top executives with the entertain ment, as well as the practical potential of their products. As president, Mr. Petersen raised a few eyebrows at headquarters when he attended a school for high-performance driving in California run by Bob Bondurant, a retired Grand Prix race driver. Dozens of top Ford executives have since followed his example. "I think it opened the eyes of a lot of guys at Ford when they saw what a car could do in their own hands," Mr. Davis said. Mr. Petersen has also emphasized the importance of having technically trained people in the top ranks of Ford. He has

Shell Oil Cuts Price It Will Pay For Some Crude

and Conoco Inc. Thursday announced reductions in the prices they are willing to pay for light grades of U.S. crude oil, and analysts said that the moves reflected continued instability in world oil markets but would not have an immediate impact on prices at the

Both companies said Thursday's cuts were in response to oversupplies of light crude oils on the market and the growing use of lower and less expensive grades of crude.

The announcements were the lat-est in a series of reductions in the posted price for selected grades of oil by U.S. companies and came as the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries pledged to try to create a temporary world oil short-sea this points in a hid to half. age this winter in a bid to halt a collapse of oil prices.

ity of the market." he said.

OPEC agreed Wednesday to cut its production ceiling by nearly 9 percent, effective Thursday, while maintaining the official OPEC price level of $29 a barrel for Saudi Arabian Light crude. The 13 oil ministers formally agreed to lower their oil production to 16 million barrels a day. OPEC's previous daily ceiling was 17.5 million barrels. Mexico, which is not a member of OPEC but often follows its lead, announced Thursday it will reduce production of crude oil by 100,000 barrels a day but will not lower prices at least through No-

The new cap was to stay in force until spot prices return to the $29per-barrel OPEC reference price. Saudi Arabia's oil minister. Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani, said he was certain the price would rise by mid November and possibly sconer. "Some oil companies do not have enough stock and therefore they have to buy," he said, "There-fore we think the action will be felt in the market the minute the oil companies try to find a barrel and don't get it easily."

The OPEC meeting followed price cuts for the light oils produced by Britain, Nigeria and Norway — grades that compete with the domestic U.S. light ods.

U.S. Energy Secretary Donald Hodel said in Washington that the OPEC decision "may not have its intended impact on world oil production and prices."

OPEC's attempt to "manipulate the market by setting artificially high prices or by seeking to fashion arbitrary restrictions on produc-tion is not in the interests of U.S. or other consumers, or, in the long run, of producers," he said.

"The market has sent a clear signal that the current oil price is too high in relation to demand and should come down."

Building Outlays Up 1.1% in U.S.

WASHINGTON - Spendng on new construction rose percent in September, its biggest gain in four months, the government reported Thursday. The Commerce Department said that total construction spending rose to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $315.3 billion in September. The gain followed three months of very weak activity and left the overall total at the same level as in June, but the weak performance was in marked contrast to the robust gains recorded at the beginning of the year.

Overall spending rose only 0.3 percent in August following declines of 1.4 percent in July and 0.4 percent in June.

Airline Comes in for Rough Landing After Ride With Youthful Financier

By Agis Salpukas New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Air One, a nine-plane airline based in St. Louis, Missouri, was staring at bankruptcy two weeks ago. It needed money quickly, just to pay the fuel bill to keep its planes aloft.

That was why it snapped up the only offer it had — from a young man. School records show him to be 19 years old.

The youth, Scot M. Spencer, promised to wire $350,000 to take care of the fuel bill and later to pump additional capital into Air One in exchange for stock. On Oct. 24, the airline elected him chairman and chief executive officer. He had said in an interview that he was 26. Mr. Spencer did not send the $350,000. Last Friday, the airline filed for protection under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code, idling its aircraft and furloughing about 450 employees.

Mark G. Morris, who had stepped down as chief executive, said in an interview Wednesday that Mr. Spencer did not send the money after repeated promises that it would be wired from various banks. Later in the day Mr. Morris said he was reassured that a friend of Mr. Spencer's father, George E. Spencer, would send the money.

"We have not heard from him since," Mr. Morris said.

Mr. Morris said that in earlier talks with Mr. Spencer and his father, both had indicated that their company, Southern Express Corp., had access to funds totaling about $30 million.

Mr. Spencer. in an interview Wednesday, asserted that Mr. Morris never spoke to his father and that his father has nothing to do with Southern Express. Mr. Spencer said he was president of the Southern Express Corp. and chairman of Southern Express Airways in Austin, He said that the agreement with Air One called for him and a group of investors to invest 22 million in the airline in return for 55 percent of the stock. He added that part of the agreement called for the board of Air One to resign. "The board did not resign," he said. "Without them resigning we were unwilling to put in any capital."

Although other corporations and individuals had expressed interest in helping the airline, Mr. Morris said, Mr. Spencer was the only one

More circulation in more major cities in more major countries. That's what it takes to be the leading U.S. business publication in Europe and Asia. And we accomplished it in such a short time.
Outside our North American home, FORTUNE

International's circulation is larger than that of The Wall Street Journal and Business Week. We also lead in sales outside the U.S. and home country, with more circulation than Germany's Capital, France's Nouvel Economiste, the United Kingdom's Financial Times, and Hong Kong's Far Eastern Economic Review.

Our prestigious, influential subscribers are your prime prospects for business advertising and consumer products and services. Fifty-three percent are at top-level management positions; 79% have international business dealings.

Do business with FORTUNE and you will have

want to?" This question, to which there is of course only one answer, marks Judith Martin's effective point of departure in her new guide for the socially perplexed. We are all born inconsiderate; a decent respect for other people is something we have to be taught, and the notion that children, left to themselves, will naturally ensures to pred wiseden and virtue.

naturally gravitate toward wisdom and virtue is a rose-timed fallacy—as fallacious, Martin would add, as the belief that the opposite of "polite" is "creative."

"Miss Manners' Guide to Rearing Perfect Children" is a sequel to "Miss Manners' Guide to Excruciatingly Correct Behavior." Like its celebrated predecessor, it takes the form of answers given by the imperturbable "Miss Manners" to bemused correspondents. It also covers (though without being repetitious) a certain amount of the same territory—inevitably, since the seeds of correct behavior are sown in childhood, but also because it is rather more concerned with murely adult issues than the title might suggest. But then as Miss Manners observes, in a memorable dictum, "no child can be considered a finished product while the parent is still alive, no matter how old the child."

Much of the guidance Miss Manners offers is severely practical. Without trying to be comprehensive — something she leaves to her less spirited competitors — she provides an enormous amount of helpful advice on everything from knives and focks (the correct use of) to suitable target areas for kissing small children (the top of the head is recommended, as long as you know how to identify a plastic ponytail holder before it pokes you in the eye). Her greatest strength, however, hes in her ability to analyze the attitudes that a piece of conduct reveals and, where appropriate, to suggest what can be done about them. Her comments tend to be object lessons in tact, in weighing the claims of rival obligations and cultivating the right kind of self-awareness. She winnsically denies that morality is any part of her business, but to the extent that

Budd Abandons World Track To Stay in Native South Africa

BLOEMFONTEIN, South Africa — Zola Budd, who left South Africa to run for Britain in the Olympic Games, on Thursday abandoned her brief international track career and pledged to stay in her native country.

By running competitively again in South Africa, Budd would be banned from international events. South Africa has been outlawed by the international Amateur Athletic Federation because of its policy of racial separation.

The 18-year-old runner ended months of speculation about her future in a statement to the Volksblad newspaper in her home town of

"For several reasons I have decided to stay in South Africa and that is chiefly because I enjoy my athletics much more here," Budd said in the statement, printed on the paper's front page.

"It was always important to me to enjoy my athletics and I hope that in the coming years I can mean something in the South African athletic world," she said in Afrikaans. "The experience in Britain was educational but I have chosen rather to stay in South Africa."

The paper reported that Budd had reapplied for the South African passport she surrendered earlian passport are some was given a British passport

Budd's coach Pieter Labushagne told the paper that there was no doubt Budd had a "very promising" international career and that "as an athlete" she should save returned to Britain.

But he said it was better for 'Zola the person to remain among ter people and her friends who care or her and love her.

At the the Los Angeles Otympics, Budd ran for Britain and was avolved in one of the Games' most nemorable incidents when she was numped by Mary Decker of the inited States in the 3,000-meter after originally being disqualified or the incident. Decker fell and id not finish the race.

The Daily Mail, which brought the runner to Britain last March 24 under an exclusive contract, quoted her as saying she wants to stay in South Africa with her mother, Tossie Budd, who is suffering from arthritis and a blood disease.

The paper reported her decision on its back page along with other sports news while previously it used to splash stories about her across its front page. Budd's contract with the Daily Mail expired Wednesday. The paper said in a report from Bloemfontein that Budd's decision not to return to Britain was disclosed Wednesday night by Jannie Momberg, vice president of the South African Athletics Union and a close friend of the runner. The newspaper quoted Mom-berg as saying: "Recently, I visited Zola at her home and told her that every member of the South African citizenship.

Budd's decision was criticized by her father, Frank, who said Wednesday night: "If I could take her back to Britain physically. I would. It's a slap in the face to a country and people who took her to their hearts."

Britain's home secretary. Leon Brittan, had issued Budd a certificate of registration as a British citizen last April 6, just 13 days after her arrival in Britain, on grounds that her grandfather was Britishborn. Normally, applications for British citizenship take months and sometimes years to process.

But Budd encountered hostility from anti-apartheid groups in Britain, and political leftists including members of the opposition Labor Party who had charged that her white skin had speeded her grant of citizenship. (UPI, AP)

Moscow Intensifies Press Campaign Against Summer Olympics in Seoul

By Martin Nesirky

MOSCOW — A mounting cam-paign in the Soviet press indicates Moscow wants the venue of the 1988 Olympic Games shifted from Scoul and may stay away if it is not. Western sports experts said Thursday.

The experts, diplomats who monitor Soviet sport policy, were commenting on newspaper articles this week criticizing the decision by the International Olympic Committee in 1981 to award the Summer Games to Seoul.

A senior sports reporter, Mikhail Dmitriev, wrote in Thursday's edition of the daily Sovietsky Sport: Really, it is not too late to correct the blunder made three years ago." Predicting that the problems of the Seoul Games would multiply as 1988 approached, he said, "Is it not better to decide now once and for all in advance not to go as far as a new 'Los Angeles nightmare?' " The Soviet Union led a boycott of the Los Angeles Games, saying there was a lack of security for Communist athletes and overcommercialization of the Olympics Moscow has not announced whether it will send a team to Seoul.

"It's obvious the Soviets do not want to go to Seoul and they are making that known early on to put pressure on the IOC," one sports expert said. "They are starting to put out the same signals they did before Los Angeles.

Others said that if the IOC did not agree to move the games, Moscow may decide to stay away. [In Seoul, Edward Derwinski, a U.S. State Department official, played down the possibility of a Soviet-bloc boycott, The Associated Press reported.

["There is no reason they [the Russians] should not wish to participate in the Seoul Olympics," Derwinski said. "In the absence of any great political problem at that time, the Soviets should attend."]

The article Thursday was the latest in a series of reports indicating strong reservations about holding es in South Korea, a coun try with which Moscow has no diplomatic ties.

On Wednesday, a Soviet handball trainer, Anatoly Yevtushenko.

The articles follow a similar pat-tern to those published before Moscow said it would not attend the Los Angeles Games. The press began by printing a series of critical articles and the Soviet Olympic Committee eventually followed this with statements making specific demands and announcing a boy-

The Olympic committee had no mment Thursday on the articles and said only that "everything will be published officially."

A committee spokesman said Soviet delegates would attend an IOC meeting starting later this week in Mexico City. But he would not say whether they would ask to discuss

Striving to avoid the unrest that has plagued recent Olympics, delegates from as many as 155 countries will gather from Nov. 6-10 in Mexico City to discuss the ground-work for the 1988 Games, United Press International reported,

"The meeting of the committees is basically a study of the future of the Olympic Games," Guillermo Montoya, secretary of the Mexican Olympic Committee, said Wednes-day. "We will study the situation and try to find a solution to assure the presence of all countries at the

He also said that the meetings will address the possibility of hold-ing key track and field and swimming events in the morning for the Seoul Summer Games to accommodate U.S. television.

"It's logical that with a 1314-hour time difference there would not be too many spectators for many sports if the finals were held at night," Montoya said. "However, I believe that is a problem that will have to be resolved at the technical level between the different federations and the sports themselves."

Evert Beats Hobbs in Wightman Cup

LONDON (AP) - Chris Evert Lloyd defeated Anne Hobbs, 6-2, 6-2, Thursday night to give the United States a 1-0 lead over Britain in the Wightman Cup tennis tournament, a best-of-seven match competition.
Playing at the Royal Albert Hall, Hobbs attacked at every opportunity, following in her first serve and trying to pressure Evert. But Hobbs was too inconsistent and her approach shots lacked the depth to trouble Evert, who sent passing shots cross court and down the line Evert's 72-minute victory eased the pressure on Alycia Moulton, who was facing Annabel Croft of Britain — in a battle of newcomers to the tournament — in the second match of the night.

USFL Stars Are Moving to Maryland

Promises, Promises

By Russell Baker N EW YORK — In groping for words to describe the manner in which Americans choose a president, I gravitate toward such excesses as preposterous, obscene, idiotic, pestilential, grotesque and monstrous. We are talking, after all, of a process that lasts three to four years, costs hundreds of millions of dollars and provides employment for a large army of quacks, frauds, journalists, confidence men, teleobone nuisances, airolane crews, barbers, dramatic coaches, masseurs and literary hacks. During the final year of the exercise, virtually all governmental ac-tivity is suspended except for routine bureaucratic functions, lest an attempt to deal sensibly with the nation's problems enrage the pub-

When it finally ends, what do we have? An officeholder - Mister President — to be photographed incessantly for the next four years while taking credit for any good luck that comes along but, more often, while blaming the Congress for all the bad.

I do not want to belittle a president's importance in the great universal scheme. The American system requires a president even though -as recent events show it can get along happily without

The monstrous nature of the presidential campaign forbids a candidate to request our votes by promising not to do much if he wins. The whole grossly overblown business conditions voters to demand grossly overblown promises, and the candidate hesitant about promising to fulfill the most unrealistic hopes might just as well quit campaigning three years before Election Day and get to know his wife and children again.

The present campaign offers ample instances of normally sensible persons driven from contact with all reality by overexposure to the campaign. Consider the Catholic bishops, men of considerable intelligence, who have lent themselves to the Reagan campaign under the delusion that the president can erase the laws governing abortion.

Every poll on this subject shows a substantial public majority for keeping the present law. It is a rare moment in history when Congress votes contrary to the sentiments of its constituents on a highly emotional issue.

The distorted bloating of the presidential campaign can make even a bishop forget that there is a vast difference between what a president can promise and what he can deliver.

The deficit-tax-budget business, for example, as discussed by Messrs. Reagan and Mondale might leave the innocent under the impression that the president is the person who sets the tax rate. Thus Mondale says he will raise taxes if

But, of course, the president can't raise taxes, or cut them either. All he can do is ask Congress to do the job. What Congress does in reply sometimes vaguely resembles what the president suggested, and then again sometimes it doesn't.
The so-called Reagan tax cuts of 1981 represented one of the rare occasions when Congress couldn't wait to help a president deliver on a campaign promise. The cuts were possible because panicked Democrats — scared by big Republican gains in Congress — read Reagan's modest popular majority as a "mandate" and fought to outdo the Republicans in opening the treasury to mass plunder.

As for taxes, so too for the arms race. It is Congress that sets the rate at which it will continue. The arms race and the present ecrie tax system have become an enduring part of the character of American life. Significant changes in either would produce revolutionary forces which, we can be sure, no mere president will be allowed to

The Mondale people, of course, and the Reagan bishops, too, will say, "Ah," but the man elected president next week will have the power to remake the Supreme Court and, so, remake the Republic. Here perhaps is one campaign issue" that must be taken serionsly. On the other hand, after judges are appointed to the Supreme Court, they often turn out to be as ornery as people or Congress, and just as adept at making presidents erind their molars.

Walter Burr's Search for the Perfect Harpsicord

By Edward A. Gargan
New York Times Service TOOSICK, New York -

Malter Burn is worned. He has got the crow-quill plectrum licked. He has found a good supplier of boar bristles. He even knows where to find a dealer in Swiss spruce, which grows only at 3,000-foot altitudes.

But what worries Burr is the

"It's a problem," he said, hefting a spool of steel wire in his hand. "I bought five pounds of this, but I was very dismayed to find that its tensile strength and carbon content were far too high. "It's steel. Harpsichord wire should be iron."

A maker of harpsichords, Burr believes that in his workshop he is the equal of Baroque harpsichord artisans in all his materials except the wire — the last mountain to climb before crafting the perfect harpsichords for 15 years. In a frame house across from the tiny red-doored Hoosick Fire Department, for which he is a volunteer, he builds the instruments and his wife, Berta, gilds and decorates them.

"We attempt to reproduce in every detail, in the wood, the finish, the type of paint, the harpsi-chord as it was made in the 18th century," Burr said, rubbing his fingers along the satin-smooth bridge of French walnut in a halffinished harpsichord.

On the workbench before him, a copy of a French double-keyboard harpsichord built by Benoist Stehlin in 1760 rested, sprinkles of sawdust still tucked in corners of the instrument. It is Burr's 11th instrument since he set out on his own in 1969. The entire ground floor of the Burrs' house, built in 1821, has been given over to harpsichord making, where the smell of saw-

An antique dentist's cabinet is mmed with bits of wood, cut nails and small patches of red felt. On a nearby bookshelf, The Metallurgy of Iron and Steel" sits neatly by "Materials and Tech-niques of Medieval Painting" and Ancient European Musical In-

"Fourteen years ago, it was considered acceptable to use plastic quill in harpsichords," said Burt as he rummaged around in the dentist's cabinet. "We use slivers of crow quill; historically, crow quill was used for 300 years. It takes three dozen primary wing leathers to quill a harpsichord." Harpsichord wires, unlike a piano's, are plucked, not ham-mered. A sliver of crow quill called the plectrum — "We like to use the Latin," Burr said — is used to pluck wires on his instruments. He has an arrangement : with some crow hunters who keep him regularly supplied with feath-

His passion for authenticity embraces all 3,600 parts of his harpsichords. The quill is fitted into a slender piece of Swiss pear wood called a jack, one of which sits on each key of a harpsichord. Pressing a harpsichord key raises the jack, and the crow quill plucks the wire.

When a key is released, a small spring prevents the quill from touching the wire. In Burr's in-

His is solitary work. "I like to do everything myself," he said.

"If I used molded plastic jacks, I could have somebody do that. But I would need a cabinetmaker to make them, and I can't afford that, so I do it myself."

While he worked his way through college as an English major at the state college in Buffalo as a part-time steel worker and a laborer at a grain mill, making harpsichords did not seem to be in Burr's future. But then he landed a job with the Schlicker Organ

"I found a niche " Rom said "I really liked making instruments." From the organ company, Burr went to work for William Dowd, a harpsichord maker in Boston.

I was there two years and made over a dozen harpsichords and 100 keyboards," he said. "I learned how to do musical finishing, to do the tuning and voicing of the instrument. It was there that I got the experience to attempt copying an antique."
In 1969, convinced that his work was not sufficiently authentic, Burr decided to begin making instruments on his own. "We are criticized as being holier than thou," said Burr. "Many makers use plywood, for example, saying that if antique makers were alive today, they would use mod-ern materials. I guess I'm a pur-

"I think I've found the best materials," Burr said, "But I feel the wire available is not equal to the old wire." To the rescue came Roger N. Wright, a professor of materials science at the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute. Last year, Burr wrote to Wright and sent him a sample of wire made in 1782 from a Shudi harpsichord owned by the Duke of Devonshire. What Burr wanted to know was whether wire tike the old wire was available or whether it could be made. What we're saying is that metallurgically there are some things that might affect the sound of the wire." Wright said. "My approach was, let's look at the microstructure, let's get chemical

One of the characteristics of old wire is it is comparatively soft. It has low carbon content. The Shudi wire has a very high phos-phorous content. Nobody makes steel with anything near that."
Wright said he hoped to be able

Forbes Spends $418,000 For 2 Bits of Americana

The publisher Malcolm Forbes

has spent $418,000 at Sotheby's in New York to buy two pieces of Americana — a 1779 letter from George Washington and an 1864 copy of the Emancipation Proclamation signed by Abraham Lincoln.
Sotheby's had given a pre-sale estimate of the proclamation's value as $50,000. Forbes snapped it up Wednesday for a $297,000. Forbes also paid $121,000 for a four-page 1779 letter written by George Washington from West Point, New York, to Major Benjamin Tall-madge, head of the Continental Army's secret service, advising him Gurrillas Sur on espionage. A 17th-century violin made by Antonio Stradivari has been auctioned to a private collector for $308,000. The so-I polorici Ferris called Auer Stradivani, made in deamhight. 1690, was sold Wednesday at Christie's in New York.
